	The young woman who sang this song was working in the town of Mbabane, a long way from her home. She had brought her makhweyane bow - which was a particularly large one - with her. Although these instruments are seldom used in town, she still found comfort in playing it, and singing quiet songs such as this one, to remind her of home. In the song, she recalls the familiar names of peoples and places which still remain dear to her heart, even though she is now so far away.
